

Do you want to do research with Dr. Stringer?

The relationship between principal investigator and graduate researcher is a partnership. It has to be a partnership. I look for students with the following qualities:

- The ability to work on their own and accomplish objectives without me holding their hand for every step along the way
- The ability to take limited preliminary information, gather additional information from the relevant literature, and synthesize a technical methodology that generates relevant data
- The ability to analyze data and determine the next steps that make the most sense based upon those results
- The ability to document their research, data, and findings clearly and succinctly
- The ability to speak up and influence the direction of research
- The ability to contribute to research proposals

Due to the nature of my projects and their potential national security implications, my priority is to bring on domestic students as research assistants.

If interested in working with Dr. Stringer, please forward an introductory email to dstring1@kent.edu with the following electronic documents:

- A copy of your academic transcript(s)
- A 1-2 page statement outlining your goals, your graduate degree goal, and what you want to do with it upon graduation.
- A 1-2 page resume including special skills, publications, internships, extracurricular, and service activities.

Without these documents attached, I won't respond to email requests.
